Sean has been an evangelist in the Technology sector for over 20 years where the majority of his tenure has been in both business development and solution architecture. In this role, he has the privilege to work with many companies and individuals, who are leaders in their respective fields. Sean's career started in the technical animation industry where his position was to take complex technical information and present it in a visually exacting way, understandable to both expert and layman alike. The skills that he learned then serve him to this day where he continues to communicate the value of innovation to broad audiences. This holistic approach allows him to speak to all of our customers, whether it is risk avoidance and cost savings to corporate customers or about individual safety to parents and students.
